

Spoke changes hands

As many of our readers already know the beginning of this year marked the official take over of Spoke by the Journalism Department on Deen campus. The department has signed a four-month contract with the Deen Student Association (DSA) ending the paper's part of the Journalism curriculum.

In the past Spoke has been plagued with inconsistency in its editorial staff. This has greatly affected the writing quality of the paper. To rectify this situation the Journalism Department has set up an editorial board consisting of senior Journalism students who will be monitoring editorial content and quality.

The new paper will follow the guidelines of the Spoke Constitution. It will encompass all areas of interest to Camosun students, sports, entertainment and business of general interest. The paper will also cover activities at other campuses of Camosun College, an area which has been seriously neglected in the past.

Spoke will welcome contributions from students outside of the Journalism program who are interested in writing for the paper.
